In regard to the saving of fuel in manufactures, it is desired especially to bring under notice the advantages of high-pressure boilers, for it is felt that ateam as well as fuel has been wasted. The exhibition will include u globe lightpressure boiler, sent by Mesers. Sanderson and Proctor, of Huddersfield; a tubular boiler, by Mr. G. Sinclair, of Leith which is capable of working up to 300lb, to the square inch; and a 60-horse Rood's boiler. by the Patent Boiler Company, of Birming bum. Among other exhibits in this department are a four-horse agricultural engine with spiral bar apparatus for securing greater economy in coal by Messra, Young Brothers of Liverpool; and patent grate or series of grates, for furnaces, by Messra, Holgano, Tedesco, and Co., of Prague. There are also a fuel economiser for railway lo complives, mechanical stokers, various muchinery. for the cutting of coal and making of peat, and a large number of other inventions with the same end in view. The wide range over which exhibitors extend is remarkable. On the one bund we find un excellent artificial fuel easily manufactured and remandiactured with the aid of silicute of soda and coal; tar from the ashes and refuse of an ordinary fire, the discovery und patent of a lady; and on the other hand the drawing of a set of three furnaces, fixed one above the other for the purpose of consum ng the smoke and of securing a more efficient use of fuel, contributed by an old Captain of the Royal Navy. After serving his country professionally for fifty years, he is desirous of rendering in his old age a further service if possible. "The domestic department is well represented, and there is every imaginable contrivance for effecting a saving in the consumption of bousehold coal: Dr. Crestadoro, were picked up close to the unlucky steamer, when deceased was spreading out some clothes the chief librarian of the Manchester Free Library, exhibits an ingenious self-feeding grate, There are also stoves specially constructed, for the burning of peat, a novel kind of shovel eight inches square. The general tendency of the inventions in this direction is to lessen the consumption by narrowing the area of the fire; in some cases to shut it out of sight altogether. The model of an invention which possesses importance from a sanitary point wiew is exhibited by Mr. Scott, of Halifax. This is a ventilating frain, by which the noxious game are not only destroyed but utilized by being consumed in the fires, with which the drain is placed in direct communication by means of a pipe, which can be turned off or on at will. There will be a large number of drawings and models shown. As far as possible the various apparatue will be in action. John O'Keeffe, in his Recollections, tells a queer story of his sitting at home, at nine years of age, drawing as tombstone, upon which he had written, "Here lies the body of-," and was endgelling his brains for a name, when there stepped into the rooms robust sheemaker, of county Wexford, with a pair of new shoes for the boy's father; "a very honest fellow-in health and person remarkably well-looking, strong, tall, and athletic." His name being Paddy Furlong, Master John took the liberty of forthwith inscribing on the tombatone, "Patrick Furlong." Patrick had been looking over his shoulder, and admiring the drawing, but was visibly taken aback a little when he saw the deliberate addition of his own name. "With the thoughtlessness of childhood," so O'Keeffee goes on to say, "I went on writing, 'who died on the -: 'here I was at another stand; when the Wexford January, the coldest time of the year, where sheemaker said to me, on the 2nd of Sepdown that. > VERY REMARKABLE CHARACTER "A very martial-looking personage, who had come with us the whole way from Constantinople without any other baggage than a large cavalry sabre, that he never once took off during the whole voyage, and also a very showily caparisoned pony, that he fed on biscuits and apples. He wore a cavalry uniform, a fez cap, and always slept in his large jack boots and spurs. He was a Hungarian, who had been for many years in the Turkish service, and besides his own language. he spoke Turkish, Arabic, Greek, French, German, Italian, and a little English. He' could play the guitar, and sing in nearly every language with taste and feeling. He never stopped talking from 6 o'clock in the morning till every one went to sleep, and there was no one left to listen to his stories. But when he sooke in Turkish or Arabic the Greek and Turkish girls used to leave their games of cards, and, forming in a circle round him, seemed fascinated with the stories of love and war that he retailed for their edification. Even the cynical Bey and his little son expressed themselves greatly charmed with these histories, and they told me Chase that he spoke both Turkish and Arabio with the greatest purity. Sometimes at the end of one of his long stories
